No. 60—Queen Anne Tables

The old gate tables and the larger turned tables had proved so useful in the past and were such general favorites that they continued to be largely used during the Queen Anne period and afterwards, just as they had held their own during the William and Mary period. Nevertheless a new type of drop-leaf table, large enough to be used as a dining table now began to be made in considerable numbers.

This was the type shown in the illustration. They had four cabriole legs and when the drop leaves were down they were oblong in shape. The leaves were either rectangular in shape or else were rounded so that when the table was extended to its full dimensions the top was either round or elliptical. When the leaves were up, one leg from each end was swung outward to support the leaves, while one other leg at each end remained fixed to the underframing and was stationary support for the body of the table. The aprons at the ends were usually shaped with cyma curves at the lower edges. Tables of this type were commonly made of walnut and were equally useful and pleasant to look at. The reproduction may be recommended for dining tables at the present day.

Marco Polo was a famous Venetian traveler of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

Buttons were originally used for purposes of ornamentation. Association or soccer football is generally played in England. Appointments to the United States Supreme Court are made only upon the death, resignation or incapacity of members of the court. Topeka, on the Kansas River, is the capitol of Kansas.

The Daily Fun Hour

Pussy Ball Tag

This game, which may be played indoors, or out, is a lively combination of Ball Tag and Pussy Wants a Corner. The ball used should be soft and light, like a gas or rubber ball. A bean-bag may be substituted for a ball.

Each player runs to a base as in Pussy Wants a corner. If outdoors these bases may be trees or fences; if indoors, articles of furniture or door posts may be stations. One player is counted out to be tosser and he holds the ball.

As in the older game, the players beckon to one another when the Tossers' back is turned and try to exchange places before he can observe their action. A shrewd Tossers pretends not to see the signals, but at the first move he turns around suddenly and throws the ball or bean-bag at one of the moving players. Any one he tags with the ball must change places with him, but if he misses and the ball or bean-bag falls, he must pick it up and continue as Tossers until he succeeds in ball-tagging another player.

When many players are engaged in the game, as may be the case in a large party during the holiday season, there may be two or three Tossers, each one provided with a ball or bean-bag of different color. With two or more balls in play at the same time the play is more rapid and the element of uncertainty which sharpens the interest of every game is greatly increased. When Pussy Ball Tag is played indoors care should be taken to remove all breakables before beginning the game.

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

The Queer People
By ARTHUR W. STACE
Copyright 1921, by Public Ledger Co.

Jack and Janet, made tiny by wearing magic fairy caps, start for the court of King Hummer of the fairies, having been invited by Prince Flitter-Flash. They laugh at queer rat people and are arrested by queer policemen for making fun of the forest folks. The policemen bring them before the king.

CHAPTER IV The Queer Judge

"Send for the judge," ordered the Fairy King, glaring at Jack and Janet. "The judge will quickly learn if these strangers should be punished for making fun of the forest folks."

"The judge is asleep, answered one of the policemen. "He will be very cross if we wake him up."
"So much the better," declared King Hummer. "The punishment he gives will then be harder." Jack and Janet didn't like that idea at all. They didn't want to be judged by a cross judge.

They didn't have any choice in the matter, however. The two policemen darted away, and soon came back leading the judge. And the judge looked very cross, indeed. He was a fuzzy looking fat person with fuzzy clothes, fuzzy whiskers all over his face, and fuzzy hair on his head. He wore big dark glasses, which rested on a broad nose above a beaked mouth.

"What's the matter?" yawned the judge.

"What's the matter?" yawned the judge, as the policemen guided him to a place beside the Fairy King.

"These strangers admit they laughed at the forest folks, but deny they made fun of them," replied the king. "What is the answer?"

"Two and two make four," answered the judge with a wise yawn. He pointed his feet severely at the Fairy King. "I sentence you to be soundly spanked and to be put supperless to bed with the frogs in the bog."

Every one was astonished. This was the same sentence the Fairy King had put upon Jack and Janet.

King Hummer blushed. It was plain to be seen he was much fussed.

"Here! You have made a mistake," he shouted at the judge. "I am the king. The strangers are in front of you."

The judge blinked his eyes at the king, then turned and blinked his eyes at Jack and Janet. "To be sure," he said, yawning widely. "Let the strangers be spanked and put supperless to bed with the frogs in the bog."

Janet wouldn't stand for that. "You can't spank us and put us supperless to bed with the frogs in the bog," she said stoutly. "We didn't make fun of the queer forest folks. We just laughed when we saw them."

"Ah!" said the judge solemnly. "Did you laugh at the forest folks, or did you laugh with them?"

"What difference does that make?" asked one of the policemen rather rudely.

"It makes all the difference in the world," replied the judge. "It is impolite to laugh at folks, but it is polite to laugh with them." He turned to Jack and Janet. "Which did you do?"

"We just laughed," answered Jack. The judge glared at them and then at the policemen.

"There, you see how wrong you were in arresting them," he finally blurted at the policemen. "I sentence you policemen to be soundly spanked and to be sent supperless to bed with the frogs in the bog."

The policemen didn't fancy that. "These strangers are the ones who should be punished," they argued. "You should—"

A rumbling snore drowned out the words of the policemen. The judge had gone sound asleep.

The snoring judge looked very funny to Jack and Janet. They couldn't help snickering. And the snicker grew into a giggle; and the giggle grew into a laugh.

They laughed so hard the fairies and queer people had to laugh, too, even the king.

One of the policemen poked the judge. He awoke with a start, his big eyes popping open in such surprise that Jack and Janet laughed harder than before.

"Ha!" snorted the judge in an angry tone. "Are you making fun of me? Answer me that, and if you don't answer right I'll snap your heads off."

The judge opened his big mouth as if he meant to fulfill that threat, no matter what the answer might be.
